Tullibardine

(Barrel Cask, 200L)

HIGHLAND SINGLE MALT SCOTCH WHISKY

FILLED IN 2015 | 6 YEARS OLD

Tullibardine distillery sits in the town of Blackford, near Gleneagles in Perthshire. This Highland Distillery has been in operation since 1949 when it was built by famed distillery designer, William Delme-Evans on the site of the old Gleneagles Brewery. It has since changed hands no less than 4 times. Mothballed in 1994 by Whyte & Mackay just a year after purchasing the distillery, Tullibardine lay silent for 9 years before being snapped up by a consortium in 2003 and brought back to life.

The consortium found that the maturing stock had originally been filled into older, tired casks. To rectify this and breathe life into the maturing spirit, all of the casks were re-racked into a variety of new casks, from various wines, younger ex-bourbon and Sherry casks, which in itself was the beginnings of the various bottle expressions we see on the market today.

At 6 years old, these casks are priced very attractively for investors, offering excellent investment potential as the casks mature throughout the key milestones ahead.

Why Invest in Whisky?

Whisky, being a tangible asset is a tax efficient, finite asset which offers investors double digit growth potential whilst being completely uncorrelated to traditional financial markets. In 2018, export of Scotch whisky reached a record level both in terms of size as well as value. Referring to data from HM Revenue and Customs (HMRC), the Scotch Whisky Association stated that the value of export of Scotch whisky in the previous year reached the level of £4.7 billion, which constitutes a growth by 7.8 per cent in comparison to 2017. Meanwhile, the equivalent of 1.28 billion of 0.7 litre bottles of Scotch whisky have been sent abroad, represents an annual growth of 3.6%. Whisky only ages in the cask and that is where, from an investment perspective, we see the most growth as the spirit continues to age.
